Alexander Skarsgard on toxic masculinity and 'The Kill Team'

The new film opens in theaters this weekend.

PAT KING

We expect a lot from those who are supposed to lead by example.

Whether it's our parents, school teachers or commanding officers, we look to those in places of authority to have some sort of moral high ground for us to follow.

In "The Kill Team," Alexander Skarsgard portrays a morally dubious sergeant in the U.S. military during the Afghanistan invasion who uses questionable tactics, including murder of innocent civilians, to incentivize his soldiers.

The film was written and directed by Dan Krauss and was based on real events Krauss chronicled in his 2013 documentary of the same name. The film also stars Nat Wolff as Andrew Briggman, one of Sergeant Deeks' soldiers who is skeptical of his tactics, and Adam Long as Rayburn, who is more than willing to dirty his hands for the sergeant he is desperate to please. Skarsgard turns in an unforgettable and haunting performance of a complex villain that should remind us of the horrors of war.

I recently spoke with Skarsgard about the film and his fascination with toxic characters.

What initially drew you to the character of Sergeant Deeks?

I was fascinated by the character of Deeks. I thought it was an opportunity to play someone with a real darkness but in a way that wasn't the stereotype of a villain where you fall in to the old tropes. It felt very different and the character had a certain charm and an ability to win over the soldiers' will without intimidating them.

He's such an interesting villain in that his motivations are both calculating and genuine at the same time.

In his mind, what they're doing is obviously justified. They're all collaborators. Everyone outside of the perimeter, when we leave the base, they're all in on it. If we kill one of them, we save 10 of ours. He's lost a lot of his friends over the years. So in his mind, everyone on the outside, if they're not a part of the combative enemy unit they're helping them out. He feels morally that what he is doing is right. He's not going out there to do something that he thinks is incorrect. For him, it's very clear. The rules of engagement are different when you're out in the field than when you're behind a desk writing them. You just have to adapt and it's crucial that these soldiers fall in line. He uses that sense of loyalty to his advantage. I was really interested in how he plays these soldiers against each other. In a way, it's almost like a love story. Because he uses jealousy. He decides to give one soldier attention and in turn making the others jealous and then they get a little attention. It's about sparsing that out in a way to get them to basically eat out of his hand and get them to do what he wants them to do. I enjoyed exploring that dynamic.

Even though these characters are soldiers in the middle of a war zone, they are all young adults and vie for Sergeant Deeks' attention like he's a father figure or a 'cool teacher.'

Exactly. When you have someone in a position of authority, it's so important to win his or her acceptance that you kind of surrender your own morality. They look up to Deeks so much. When he shows up, he's everything they aspire to be. He's a tough soldier, he knows everything, he's seen everything. These guys are kids, they're rookies. So whatever he says, they will do anything just to win his approval.

While Briggman is trying to win over Deeks in order to climb the chain of command, Rayburn is more in it to do Deeks' dirty work by killing those who may be standing in their way. This causes some tension between the two soldiers.

That is something that Deeks acknowledges and uses to his advantage. Because when Briggman starts to resist or shows him autonomy in terms of his moral choices, Deeks quickly turns away from him and leaves him alone and leaves him vulnerable. Deeks knows that if he leaves him out in the cold for a bit, by having Rayburn as his pet, it's going to be so much easier to win him back over.

There are many cases where Deeks uses his own family life back home as emotional collateral to make sure that Briggman does not tell the higher command of what is actually going on. It puts Briggman in a tough spot.

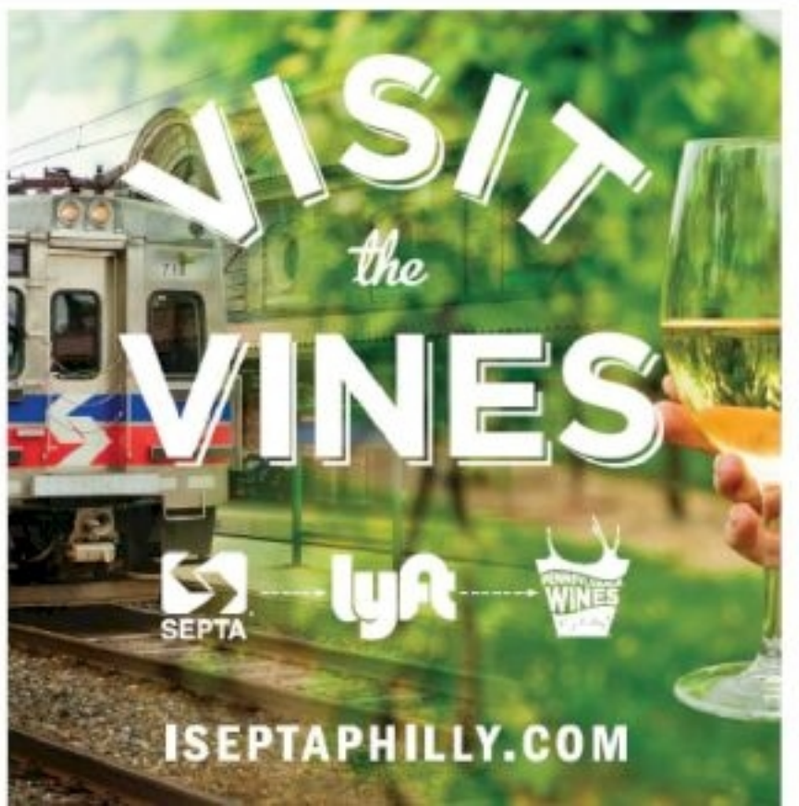
It shows complexity. I think it's important to show the audience how fallible we all are and how easy it is. This is a heightened situation, in a war zone, when you are surrounded by people who are supposed to protect you. Your brothers in arms. But then that makes it more difficult to turn against them even when your morality is being compromised. So that makes it hard and Deeks knows that and uses it.

Between "Big Little Lies," "On Becoming a God in Central Florida" and this film, you have been playing some prime examples of toxic masculinity. In a way, it's doing the world a service in showing men how not to behave. Have you been actively seeking out those kinds of roles?

It's not something I've been seeking out, even though I'm fascinated by these topics. When you can find a well-written script and a character who is fascinating and exists in that universe without being didactic or preachy, I find that those are often the projects I gravitate towards. They all speak to something quite topical and timely.

Have these roles made you want to play "the hero" in other projects?

There was definitely more levity in "On Becoming a God…." My character is gambling away what little money they have and jeopardizing his family's future. But at the end of the day, the tone of it wasn't as dark as some of my other projects. I've done a couple of things that have been lighter. I just finished "Godzilla ss. Kong" — that character is definitely not a dark and disturbed character. That was quite cathartic doing something so different. I think I needed that (laughs).



Is a total knee replacement right for you?

Jefferson Health
HOME OF SIDNEY KIMMEL MEDICAL COLLEGE

ASK 3B ORTHOPAEDICS AT JEFFERSON HEALTH:

The decision to undergo a total knee replacement is a big one—but if you're living with chronic pain, it can be the game changer that restores your mobility. Metro spent time with Robert E. Booth, Jr., M.D., the medical director of 3B Orthopaedics at Jefferson Health who has performed tens of thousands of total knee replacements in his career.

What happens to our knees as we age?

We're all born with a coating of cartilage on the ends of our bones, as well as a shock absorber called a meniscus. Together, they keep the bones steady and prevent them from rubbing together. As we age, we lose that cartilage. If you do an MRI, 100 percent of people over the age of 50 have tears in their meniscus. It's sort of like wrinkles or gray hair. The cartilage essentially dries out and gets worn away. As we get older, many of us also gain weight and suffer other injuries that accelerate the process of those bones coming together and eventually touching. When that happens, it produces arthritis and pain.

What can we do about it?

Blindly rushing into a total knee replacement isn't something we recommend. Synthetic steroid injections can go far in reducing inflammation and relieving pain for three to four months. Hyaluronic acid gel is another innovative treatment that helps lubricate the joint. Every joint has fluid in it, but when it gets arthritic, that fluid gets thin and watery. Hyaluronic acid is like extra thick artificial joint fluid. It only works about 50 percent of the time, but when it does, relief can last six months to a year.

When should you consider a total knee replacement?

There are three main things to consider:

1. You have pain. It's rarely horrible or excruciating; more achy and annoying. It's unpredictable and there are good days and bad days, so you never really know what tomorrow's going to be. That robs you of your ability to live the life you want.
2. Your knees are unsteady. Stiff, arthritic joints put you at risk for falling. If you break your wrist or hip, that's harder to fix than your knee.
3. It's affecting your lifestyle. For older people, the concern is losing the ability to live independently. For younger folks, it's not being able to walk the dog or play with their grandchildren or be athletic or do their job. Lifestyle is by far the biggest driver.

What's a total knee replacement like?

You first have to undergo a full medical evaluation to see if you're a good candidate. The surgery itself is actually the easiest part, and most people do not need general anesthesia. A total knee replacement, for me, usually takes less than half an hour. And if you can do them quickly, you can often do two knees at once. People actually recuperate at about the same rate as a single replacement.

What makes 3B Orthopaedics at Jefferson Health special?

Our team of experienced knee surgeons is one of the few that focuses exclusively on total knee replacements. We also have a knee center that's part of Jefferson Bucks Hospital. So you have the advantage of having a physical service system that's geared to do knees and take care of those demands, but you also have access to resources and specialists to back us up in case there's a medical issue. Your operation will be performed by your surgeon.

Curious if a total knee replacement is right for you? Schedule a consultation with one of the renowned experts at 3B Orthopaedics at Jefferson Health at 1-888-ORTHO3B.

Your guide to celebrating Halloweekend and Halloween in Philly

8 delightfully frightful family-friendly events, themed parties and more MADELINE PRESLAND

Halloween isn't just limited to one day. It's a season of haunted houses, scary movie screenings and other celebrations that all lead up to Halloweekend and the holiday itself. There are plenty of ways to celebrate thrilling monsters and otherworldly beings with shows, street festivals and more. Whether you're trick or treating with little ones or flying solo, here are eight ways to get spooky this Halloween.

East Passyunk Fall Fest & Spooky Saturday
East Passyunk Avenue Business Improvement District throws the ultimate Halloweekend bash for all ages and Halloween comes early for trick-or-treaters. Collect candy from more than 30 businesses up and down the avenue starting at 11 a.m. Kids will also love free pumpkin painting and the chance to show off costumes to win prizes. Costume contests are split by age group starting at 11 a.m. Pet parents, this one is for you too: there's a dog Halloween costume contest at 12:30 p.m. Shop the makers and craft fair for gifts, clothing and home decor. End the day with outdoor dining and a fall cocktail at one of the many restaurants in the neighborhood.

Oct. 26, 11 a.m.-4 p.m., 1904 E Passyunk Ave., pay as you go, visiteastpassyunk.com

Tresferatu Halloween Dance Party
Head to Transylvania via The Trestle Inn for a night of vampire-ish disco, dancing and drink specials. Come early to catch a screening of the classic silent horror film "Nosferatu" at 7:30 p.m. Dress in your spookiest or most glamorous costume to enter the bar's costume contest. Buy your tickets in advance for $10 or pay $15 at the door. 21+.

Oct. 26, 10 p.m., The Trestle Inn, 339 N 11th St., $10-$15, thetrestleinn.com

Check out Brian Sanders' 2nd Sanctuary experience. TED LIEVERMAN

2nd Sanctuary Halloween Performances
Enter a haunted church … if you dare. Dance company Brian Sanders' JUNK hosts an interactive experience on the upper floors of a Victorian church in Graduate Hospital. Choose your own adventure by picking just one performance, or dedicate an entire evening to completing all three 1970s-themed experiences. Step into one of their vintage phone booths to take a ride on the Phantom Portal VR Telecom Tour. See a trippy dance with skeletons during Dancing Dead Live in the Hall of the Dearly Departed. Bring a friend (or several) to solve the Zoltan's Zarkade Escape Room in the Lost Lodge, in which you must solve the disappearance of Kid Scout Troop 244. Price of admission includes access to the Zombie Disco and a mysterious labyrinth. Children are welcome, but these experiences are recommended for attendees 13 and older.

Multiple dates, Brian Sanders' JUNK, 2040 Christian St., $29-$35, briansandersjunk.com

Terror Behind the Walls
If you haven't been to Eastern State Penitentiary's Terror Behind the Walls haunted house, make sure you go before it ends in early November. The attraction has six different themed sections in addition to the popular speakeasy hosted in Al Capone's former cell. The entire attraction is more suitable for older children and adults, but bring kids ages 7-12 on Sunday evenings for Family Night. Kids can say, "Monster be good!" to interact with the actors.

Multiple dates, Eastern State Penitentiary, 2027 Fairmount Ave., $24-$115, easternstate.org

Spooky Mini Golf
Celebrate Halloween with a few rounds on the course for the last day of Spooky Mini Golf at Franklin Square. The park's Philly-themed course has a seasonal twist with a pumpkin patch, scary spiders and more. Bring your trick-or-treaters after collecting candy and celebrate wins (or losses) with a cake shake from SquareBurger.

Oct. 31, 6 p.m.-9 p.m., Franklin Square, 200 N 6th St., $8-$10, historicphiladelphia.org

Mischief at the Mütter
Even if being an adult means you can't go trick-or-treating, there are plenty of chances for both tricks and treats at the Mütter. The museum of medical oddities throws the ultimate Halloween party that includes adults-only late night admission to the museum. Come dressed to the nines in your finest costume and see if you will take home one of the prizes in the costume contest. See performances by Philadelphia Circus Arts, tarot readings and the ultimate frightful dance party. Don't miss the museum's dessert collaboration with Weckerly's Ice Cream and kegs of specialty beer in the Benjamin Rush Medicinal Garden. 21+.

Oct. 31, 6:30 p.m.-11 p.m., The Mütter Museum of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, 19 S 22nd St., $50, muttermuseum.org

4 MODELS THAT ARE CHANGING THE "ALPHA MALE" CLICHÉS

Long ago, Cary Grant, David Beckham and Chris Hemsworth stopped showing masculinity as an ideal image because fashion is more diverse than that. Metro highlights other models who contribute to transforming the clichés of the "white alpha" man.

LUZ LANCHEROS MWN

KROW KIAN
(Instagram: @krowwithak)

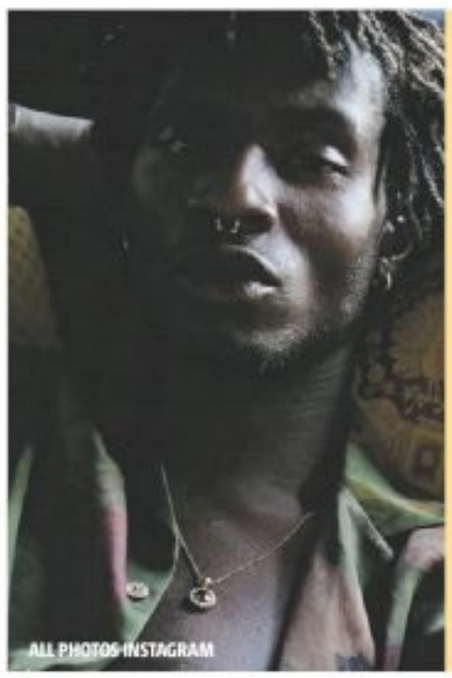
Kian is transgender and has already worked with brands such as Louis Vuitton, Alexander McQueen and Haider Ackermann. @krowwithak has also appeared in several editorials such as Vogue and Dazed, among others. In fact, he debuted with Louis Vuitton, which was looking for transgender and queer men for a catwalk. Through cosplay culture and Japanese culture, Kian began to assume the identity and started the process of sexual reassignment. This process was revealed in a documentary called "TRANSformation," where Krow told the world about the entire process.

SHAUN ROSS
(Instagram: @shaundross)

This albino model could already be classified as a "supermodel." Ross has been in the industry for a decade. He suffered from bullying because of his appearance and at 16 he was discovered on YouTube. Shaun appeared in videos of Katy Perry, Beyoncé and Steve Aoki, among other artists. Belonging to the famous House of Xtravaganza, his latest collaboration was made with the United Nude brand.

LEON DAME
(Instagram: @leondame)

Dame went viral thanks to his peculiar catwalk in Margiela's recent presentation at Paris Fashion Week, when he was dressed as a sailor. That performance was rehearsed and managed to make Anna Wintour smile. Dame already has a lot of experience: he debuted in 2016, is 20 years old and was discovered while on a bus. Currently, Leon studies theatre theory and politics in his hometown. He has already modeled for Alexander McQueen, Bottega Veneta and Valentino, among other brands.



ADONIS BOSSO
(Instagram: @septumpapi)

Bosso has been modeling for ten years and has worked with Dolce & Gabbana, Armani Exchange and Vivienne Westwood, among other big brands. His look is imposing and elegant, yet eclectic. It works both for disruptive publishers and for designer brands such as Moda Operandi. He has a son with model and actress Slick Woods.

Somewhere in the middle

Singer-songwriter Vérité sat down with Metro to give the scoop on her new album and inspirations.

MOLLY GIVEN

Vérité. GETTY IMAGES

We have all heard stories of musicians who strive to maintain their individuality and ownership of their creativity. In the industry today, that is no easy feat, but Brooklyn-based singer-songwriter Vérité has managed to do just that.

The songstress has consistently put out intoxicating tracks that push boundaries and speak from her soul while also avoiding the corruption and dictation of a major label. In addition to independence, the "Phase Me Out" singer has also managed to pen her sophomore album "New Skin" (out Oct. 25) and land a gig opening for the X Ambassadors North American tour in the same year.

Vérité sat down with Metro to discuss her inspirations and her dedication to individuality.

What does your writing process look like?

A general theme of what I write about is really blowing up these small moments that I experience and maybe other people experience and over-analyzing them to the point where they are a little unrecognizable. But I think definitely what always captures my interest is just the subtleties of existing. My process really depends on the situation or who I'm writing with. If I'm writing alone, I just kind of sit with me and the piano, if I'm writing in a session I normally go in with a little less expectations and a little more levity – I'm willing to experiment and throw things out there. If I'm writing with collaborators that I know really well it's also much different. I think writing with other people is just motivating in general.

You have said before that we're a culture addicted to the excitement of beginnings and the tragedy of endings and your album "New Skin" is somewhere in the middle. What did you mean by that?

I wrote the album while I was in a really strange place in my life. I think it was the first time in my life that things had become stable. My career had hit a point where it was sustainable and I had been in the same relationship for four and a half years. Not that things aren't exciting, it's just that things are so much different in the beginning when you're on a pink cloud and everything is new and shiny – that kind of experience of elation does fade. Then I feel like a lot of times you don't hear stories about people until they've broken and their career is massive or they get married or break up. This middle place is just somewhere I feel like I've existed my whole life. I wanted to kind of delve into the cycle of that and the beauty of it. Just being committed to something fully despite the ups and downs. Running my career the way I have has really forced me to redefine what I think of being successful and redefine [the] meaning in what I'm doing.

Are there any tracks from your new album that you're most excited to perform?

I think "Think of Me" is going to be a moment live, and I'm really excited to perform that for people. Also the title track "New Skin" and the opening of the set I also think is going to be a really great moment – I start it a cappella and it's very quiet, almost slightly uncomfortable. I think it will be fun to do.

You're a thriving independent artist -- can you tell me a little more about Kobalt's AWAL program since you were the first signee?

It's been a really crazy experience kind of growing with AWAL as a company. [I'm] somebody who has always been on the fringe in the way that a major label deal didn't make sense to me. I wasn't really feeling excited to play the games that all that entails. But early in my career, I was having a lot of success and traction with streaming and was kind of building really steadily on my own. I think taking a partnership as I have with AWAL enables me to grow and have a stronger core team while maintaining my independence with my projects – which I think was the selling point. That has always been what is most important to me. I always need to know that I have the option to move forward when things don't work. I think that's such a pitfall of the traditional music industry – the idea that these companies have ownership of you and your music and can dictate whether or not you get to release music and move forward. Maintaining my independence is not only good for my sanity, but also for proving that it is a successful model.

Laura Beil talks new riveting podcast following a medical disaster, "Bad Batch."

"Patients are offered a miracle cure, but instead they end up rushed to the hospital in critical condition."

The first line of the official synopsis for this new investigative podcast from Wondery certainly hits hard and ignites alarm bells. Putting your trust in the medical field and having disastrous results is quite literally a nightmare, and a subject that award-winning reporter Laura Beil knows all too well having hosted the smash-hit podcast "Dr. Death" and now her latest series "Bad Batch." Beil's goal with her new six-part podcast is to inform listeners on valuable medical information while diving into a story about stem cells so twisted and shocking that you'll be intrigued – even within the first five minutes. Beil sat down with Metro to discuss the podcast and why she believes knowledge is one of the most important assets for all patients.

Before "Bad Batch" you also worked on the podcast "Dr. Death." How did you get involved in the podcast world?

I didn't really choose to get into making a podcast, the podcast actually came to me. I'm a longtime print writer, that's what I've mostly done at the Dallas Morning News as a medical reporter, and just out of the blue, Wondery contacted me and asked if I'd be interested in putting together the story of Christopher Duntsch in a podcast. They were looking for someone who could report it and write it, and as far as the audio component, they helped me learn how to do that. It was totally new for me, but there was a good team working with me on it.

Do you feel like you get to exercise different journalistic muscles with podcasts?

Yes, it's a new way of telling a story. I do like the challenge of doing something different and telling a story in a different way. I don't know if I want to do it forever, but for the time being, I'm enjoying it.

So when did you decide you wanted to start working on "Bad Batch?"

This was a story that I wanted to tell. We had an instance in Texas which is highlighted in the podcast, so there was a vehicle to tell this story. It's a lot more complicated of a story than "Dr. Death" and I'm glad that Wondery was willing to take it on, because it's not quite a story that has been told in a podcast before. There's an incident that happens, but there's also a mixture of science in there too whereas in "Dr. Death" there was a more clear narrative. I think it's an important story because there are so many people who put hope into stem cells but there is still so much we don't know.

Since the content is sensitive, was there anyone involved who was not willing to talk?
There were certainly people who I wanted to talk to who just would not. That was definitely the case. I have to say the person who is really at the center of the podcast who is the founder and CEO of the company was quite willing to talk though. He actually spent a lot of hours talking to us and I'm glad that he did that. He was very cooperative so he's in there a lot kind of trying to explain what happens and what the company was doing.

If someone were to ask you what "Bad Batch" was about, what kind of synopsis would you give?
I would say it's a really in-depth look at the stem cell industry and what you should be aware of if you're going to spend lots of cash – because it is cash and it's not covered by insurance. It's a story you should hear if you're paying a lot of money for stem cells. If you listen to the story and you still want to pay a lot of money for stem cells that is certainly your prerogative but at least you'll be informed.

Why do you think it's necessary for people to hear this story?
I think what "Bad Batch" and "Dr. Death" have in common is how I'm trying to protect vulnerable people. It's hard for us as patients to really navigate what's going on a lot of times, I think there is a lot of burden on patients. I think with stem cells the burden also falls on the patients to educate themselves and because the people who are "educating" them are the ones who are trying to sell it to them. I think information is empowering for patients so that's what I'm trying to do, provide information to help them make the best decisions they can.

Overall what do you hope audiences take away from "Bad Batch?"
I hope that people find that it's a good story and that it's a good window into something that has really become a $2 billion industry. I think it's something worth looking at. So overall I hope they find it to be a compelling story, but I also hope they walk away with something that will truly benefit them.

Aries Stick to what makes the most sense. Work hard and finish what you start. Look at your options and pick up skills and qualifications to help you obtain your objective.

Taurus Don't let the changes others make slow you down or get in your way. Be direct and make your objective known. A partnership looks inviting.

Gemini A mixed message will confuse you. When in doubt, ask. Refuse to let anyone come between you and a loved one. A physical challenge will help relieve stress.

Cancer Listen carefully and do your best to get along. Refuse to let your emotions take you on a journey that will lead to regret. Offer positive suggestions and make romance a priority.

Leo You'll do best if you channel your time and energy into something that is geared toward personal growth, self-improvement and better health.

Virgo A change to your environment or surroundings will be rejuvenating. Dust off old ideas and give them a new and exciting spin.

Libra Have compassion for those around you who are struggling. A kind word will buy you the support you need to reach your goals. Don't waste time getting angry or indulging in no-win situations.

Scorpio Take part in something that offers introductions to people and pastimes that excite you. Networking, mixing and mingling will ignite your creativity.

Sagittarius Don't give up. The less you do with others and the more you do on your own, the better. Someone will take advantage of you if you are too accommodating.

Capricorn Make changes at home or at work that will add to your momentum. Feeling comfortable and relaxed in your surroundings is a good place to start. Romance is encouraged.

Aquarius Staying on top of your responsibilities and getting your personal papers in order should be your intent. Don't worry about the changes that others make; you can just go about your business.

Pisces Listen, interact, find out what you can do to help and nurture relationships. Speak from the heart and offer unique suggestions. Pursue a creative or romantic vision. EUGENIA LAST

Trump's Republican allies push ahead with anti-impeachment efforts

Republicans launched their counter on Thursday.

Republicans pressed their offensive against the Democratic-led impeachment inquiry against President Donald Trump on Thursday with plans for a Senate resolution calling it illegitimate, while the White House lauded lawmakers in his party who stormed into a high-security room and interrupted testimony.

The House of Representatives is examining whether there are grounds to impeach Trump over his request in a July telephone call to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky to investigate a domestic political rival, Joe Biden. The former U.S. vice president is a leading contender for the Democratic nomination to face Trump in the 2020 presidential election.

Trump on Monday called on his fellow Republicans to "get tougher" in fighting the impeachment inquiry, which threatens to end his presidency.

Republican Senator Lindsey Graham, a Trump ally who on Tuesday agreed with the president's description of the impeachment probe as a "lynching" by Democrats, was scheduled to announce his resolution later on Thursday. Graham's office said the resolution would condemn the "closed-door, illegitimate impeachment inquiry."

Republicans have sought to attack the legitimacy of the impeachment probe and have complained about depositions being given behind closed doors. The U.S. Constitution, however, gives the House wide latitude in how to handle impeachment.

Even if passed in the Republican-led Senate, the resolution would not affect the House inquiry. However, it would place Republican senators on the record on impeachment at a time when some cracks in Trump's support within his own party have appeared, including pointed criticism from Senator Mitt Romney.

If the House passes articles of impeachment - formal charges - the Senate would then hold a trial on whether to remove Trump from office. A two-thirds majority of the 100-seat Republican-controlled Senate would be required to remove the president.

No U.S. president has ever been removed from office via impeachment.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell voiced support for Graham's resolution but did not say when he would bring it up for a vote. He also accused House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and her fellow Democrats of having an "impeachment obsession."

Chuck Schumer, the top Senate Democrat, accused Trump and his Republican congressional allies of hypocrisy for demanding that impeachment proceedings be done in public even as the administration withholds subpoenaed documents and tries to block testimony to House investigators.

"On the one hand, you say you want everything to be public when it comes to the hearings. But you won't give up any documents," Schumer said on the Senate floor. "The hypocrisy, the self-serving nature of the president's statements and his Republican allies here in the House and Senate is glaring." REUTERS

Police say 39 victims found dead in truck near London were Chinese

The Chinese Embassy has released a statement.

Police move the lorry container where bodies were discovered in Grays, Essex, Britain. REUTERS

Police were given extra time on Thursday to question a driver arrested on suspicion of murder after 39 people, believed to be Chinese nationals, were found dead in a refrigerated truck near London, in an investigation focused on human trafficking.

Officers searched three properties in the County Armagh area of Northern Ireland. The driver has not been formally identified but a source familiar with the investigation said he was Mo Robinson from the Portadown area of the British province.

Paramedics and police found the bodies of 31 men and eight women on Wednesday in a truck container on an industrial estate at Grays in Essex, about 20 miles (32 km) east of London.

For years, illegal immigrants have attempted to reach Britain stowed away in trucks, often from the European mainland. In the biggest tragedy, 58 Chinese were found dead in a tomato truck in 2000 at the port of Dover.

"We read with heavy heart the reports about the death of 39 people in Essex," the Chinese Embassy said in a statement, adding further clarification was being sought with police.

Essex police said their priority was ensuring dignity for the victims during their inquiry.

"Each of the 39 people must undergo a full coroner's process to establish a cause of death before we move on to attempting to identify each individual within the trailer," police said in a statement, saying that would be a time-consuming operation.

Police were given permission from local magistrates to detain the 25-year-old driver for an additional 24 hours on Thursday.

The truck arrived at Purfleet docks in Essex from the Belgian port of Zeebrugge. REUTERS

Democratic U.S. Representative Ryan of Ohio ends presidential bid

REUTERS

U.S. Representative Tim Ryan on Thursday said he was abandoning his bid for the Democratic Party's 2020 presidential nomination and would instead seek re-election representing his district in Ohio.

Ryan, whose campaign was marked by slow fundraising and low poll numbers, is the latest to withdraw his candidacy in a slowly thinning field of Democrats seeking the party's nod to run against Republican Donald Trump.

A moderate Ohio Democrat from a blue-collar district, Ryan had positioned himself as a candidate who could appeal to the working-class voters who fled the party in 2016 to vote for Trump.

On Thursday, he said he would instead focus on winning re-election in his northeastern Ohio district, which has lost manufacturing jobs in recent years.

"I got into this race in April to really give voice to the forgotten people of our country. I look forward to continuing that fight," Ryan said on Twitter.

Former Vice President Joe Biden and Massachusetts Senator Elizabeth Warren lead the pack of 18 remaining candidates, down from 24 at its peak earlier this year.

Miramar, Florida Mayor Wayne Messam says on his Twitter profile that he is still running, although records show his campaign raised only $5 during the third quarter of this year. REUTERS

Here's the good news for the Eagles: the 5-1 Bills may be complete frauds.

Just look at the teams Buffalo has beaten this season: the Jets (17-16), Giants (28-14), Bengals (21-17), Titans (14-7) and Dolphins (31-21).

Not an above .500 team in the bunch and a few of those games were awfully close.

The Bills' best game of the season was actually their only loss, as they fell to the Patriots at home in Week 4, 16-10, in a game that could have gone either way.

If the Eagles' porous secondary can't solve Bills quarterback Josh Allen on Sunday, then there is no hope for them. In Allen's last three games he has averaged 191.3 yards passing with four TD passes as well as four picks. His average passer rating in those three games has been a brutal 77.9.

ALL GETTY IMAGES

The Eagles also had their come-to-Jesus moment this week when Lane Johnson sent the locker room into a frenzy.

This could, of course, work one of two ways: either it rallies the troops, or things are about to get brutally ugly for Doug Pederson and his crew. This will be the game that decides which way the Birds are going the rest of the way.

Here's saying the Eagles have at least one more strong effort left in them.

The last time they came off a two-game losing streak, they went into Green Bay and stunned the Packers, 34-27.

The Bills are also 0-2 against the spread this season as home favorites, and they are not exactly unstoppable at New Era Field despite the old stadium's reputation for being one of the toughest places to play in the NFL. Under Sean McDermott, the Bills are a pedestrian 12-7 at home.

The play: Eagles +1.5

Teddy Bridgewater is now 28-7 ATS as a starting quarterback in the NFL. If you bet a billion dollars on all 35 Bridgewater starts, you'd be up $20.3 billion and would be one of the richest self-made people in the world.

NFL Week 8 betting: Giants at Lions

Two of the worst defenses in the NFL will square off under the dome at Ford Field on Sunday afternoon as the New York Giants visit the Detroit Lions. Bettors shouldn't hesitate to take the Over.

Bet this game now at MetroBet.us/Sugar and get a free $50 VISA gift card.

The Lions suffered a big loss when running back Kerryon Johnson (knee) was placed on the IL, but Detroit's offense should be just fine leaning on Matt Stafford in this one. The Giants are 28th in total defense this season. The Lions' aerial attack is sixth in the league at 277.2 yards per contest.

Meanwhile, only the Bengals have allowed more yards per game to opposing teams than the Lions (428.7). The unit will only be weaker if cornerback Darius Slay (hamstring) can't suit up. Daniel Jones has been regressing under center for the G-Men, but feeding Detroit a steady diet of Saquon Barkley should be a recipe for success.

The total has been exceeded in each of the Giants' last five road games and the Over is 13-5 in the Lions' last 18 games following a double-digit home loss.

The play: Over 49 points

Phillies get their man, hire Joe Girardi as manager

The 55-year-old World Series winner was also being pursued by the Mets.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The Philadelphia Phillies have hired Joe Girardi as their 55th manager in franchise history, as first reported by MLB.com's Todd Zolecki.

The parameters of Girardi's contract have not been disclosed as of yet.

In a search conducted predominantly by owner John Middleton, the Phillies have picked up one of the most experienced candidates on the managerial market. The 55-year-old Girardi has managed for 11 seasons in the majors. Ten of them came with the New York Yankees, which included six postseason appearances and a World Series championship in 2009.

During his decade with the Yankees, Girardi was 200 games over .500 with a record of 910-710. He also won the National League Manager of the Year Award during his lone season with the Marlins in 2006.

He fits the bill of exactly what Middleton was looking for – and he pulled off the move in an efficient manner.

The hiring of Girardi took all of 15 days after Gabe Kapler was dismissed after two disappointing seasons in which the Phillies failed to live up to high expectations created after the acquisitions of Bryce Harper, JT Realmuto, and Jean Segura.

From the moment Kapler was shown the door, the Phillies were immediately linked with experienced candidates that could help lead a team with postseason hopes. That included Girardi, Dusty Baker and Buck Showalter.

Girardi quickly became the favorite considering he was the only one of those three to have won a World Series. Showalter and Baker have managed for a combined 42 seasons and have still yet to win a ring as a manager.

There was plenty of competition for the new Phillies skipper, however. The Cubs and NL East-rival Mets were heavily linked with Girardi over the past few weeks after they parted ways with Joe Maddon and Mickey Callaway, respectively.

The Cubs decided to go with former catcher and 2016 World Series winner, David Ross, making the announcement on Wednesday while the Mets are still in the throes of a managerial search that has taken its fair share of twists and turns.

Girardi was initially believed to be the favorite to make his way to Queens, but the Mets' search has been muddled by numerous names ranging from Carlos Beltran to Luis Rojas, to Eduardo Perez, among others. He met with the Mets for a second time on Tuesday, one day after his second meeting with the Phillies.

Taking over the home dugout in Citizens Bank Park, Girardi will be bringing an intensity to the Phillies that will only endear himself to the fan base starving for a playoff appearance. It's been eight years since Philadelphia has seen playoff baseball.

With that intensity, Girardi is set in his ways as he's had clashes with upper management before – most notably during his days with the Marlins. Regardless, this is a manager that will take little advice from the general manager when filling out a lineup card but will fight tooth and nail for his players.

For an organization that looks as though it's losing trust in its GM, Matt Klentak, it looks like Middleton found his perfect match.

Eagles vs. Bills: What to watch

The Eagles will look to stop their skid against a surprising Bills team.

JOVAN ALFORD
sports@metro.us

PRESSURING JOSH ALLEN

Over the last two weeks, the Eagles' defensive line has failed to pressure and bring down whatever opposing quarterback is under center.

In last Sunday's primetime game against the Cowboys, Prescott had time to throw the ball to his favorite target in wide receiver Amari Cooper, despite being sacked three times.

If the Eagles want to salvage their season on Sunday, the defensive line must get sustained pressure on Bills' second-year quarterback Josh Allen.

In seven games this season, the former first-round pick has been sacked 15 times and blitzed 78 times behind a Bills offensive line that is ranked 26th in pass protection with an adjusted sack percentage of 8.6, per Football Outsiders.

That being said, it seems like a perfect opportunity for the Eagles' defensive ends Derek Barnett and Brandon Graham to wreak some havoc.

Through several weeks, the former Tennessee Volunteer standout leads Philly in quarterback knockdowns (7). Graham leads the Eagles' defense in sacks (4), QB pressures (18), and QB hurries (10).

GETTING CARSON WENTZ INTO A RHYTHM

Over the last three games, Philly's offense has produced some big plays, but they still look out of rhythm. They are not converting on their long-developing plays, which are consequently killing potential scoring drives.

There is some blame being placed at the feet of Carson Wentz for the offense's struggles. But there is only so much he can do from under center.

Therefore, what can the Eagles' coaching staff do to remedy this issue against a passing defense that has allowed only four passing touchdowns?

Well, for starters, keep the offense simple. This means ditching the long-developing plays and instead opt for quick passes to get Wentz into a rhythm.

While this will help him, it will also build confidence for his receivers and tight ends. Also, the Eagles should feature the TE and HB screens more.

There is no reason why Dallas Goedert and possibly Boston Scott could eat and pick up huge chunks of yards behind this offensive line. If the Eagles can do this and get running back Jordan Howard going, they could have a chance to win the game.
